

The Rejection of Zionist Tourists in Thailand Symbolizes the Current Global Public Response

News:

Following anti-‘Israeli’ protests and local disputes involving tourists in Thailand, ‘Israeli’ Ambassador Alona Fisher-Kamm urged for cooperation to keep Middle Eastern conflicts from spilling over into the country. Recent demonstrations outside the Bangkok embassy featured anti-Semitic signs, while a Rosh Hashanah event in Phuket was canceled over security concerns. Tensions stem from alleged disrespect for local culture, business regulation bypasses (such as illegal schools), and land-ownership loopholes by ‘Israeli’ visitors. In response, a French zoo owner on Koh Samui was ordered for deportation after banning ‘Israeli’ tourists, and the embassy issued Hebrew behavioral guides. Thai Foreign Minister Sihasak Phuangketkeow stressed that foreign tourists must respect local laws and customs to maintain diplomatic ties, which support tens of thousands of Thai agricultural workers in ‘Israel’. Despite the friction, Fisher-Kamm expressed optimism, describing Thailand as a tolerant destination for over 420,000 annual ‘Israeli’ visitors seeking travel away from regional conflicts. ### Comment:

The tension between ‘Israeli’ tourists and local communities in Thailand reflects two problems in the context of the existence of Zionist entities. First, the arrogant behavior of their citizens who often feel immune from the law because of their state support shows that this is not only happening in Palestine but also in various other regions. In Thailand, for example, there have been complaints about violations of business rules, illegal schools, abuse of land ownership gaps, and disrespect for local culture. This has also happened in Indonesia when. Two ‘Israeli’-born men with German passports created a social media account @the.bali.dream were deported from Indonesia for providing travel planning, honeymoon, and visa processing services for ‘Israeli’ passport holders.

Secondly, anti-Zionist sentiment in Thailand indicates a poor image of the Jewish entity in many countries, including Southeast Asia. The results of the June 2026 Pew Research Center report illustrate that in 36 countries, especially in Muslim countries, including European countries, an average of 67% of adults have a bad view of Jewish entity, while only 25% have a good view. In Thailand, the level of negative perception also reaches around 33 percent.

The emergence of rejections of Zionists is the fruit that is reaped because of their attitude in Palestine that they no longer treat others humanely. So, it is natural that when they travel to various countries, they are rejected and not treated with respect. Unfortunately, those who dare to be critical and firm towards the Zionist entity and its citizens only occur at the public level while their countries still have good relations with each other. In fact, if the leaders of the countries are willing to be firm, the impact on the Zionist entity will be more significant.
